

I'm so happy to be able to pass on the good news again. Ryan is having a great day. He was extubated this morning and is doing well. He's trying to talk to me, but his throat is so sore from the tube that he just whispers and it's hard to hear him. It should be much easier for him to talk to me tonight or tomorrow. He was sitting up in a chair and wasn't just sleeping, like he often is. You can almost see him healing right before your eyes, as he looks better and better with each visit. I say that and yet, Ryan is still a very seriously injured ICU patient. He has a long way to go. But it's so much better to see him getting just a little bit better everyday, than to see him getting a little bit worse. Everyone says this is a rollercoaster ride and there will be hard times. But we're doing our best to focus on the good and pray through the bad. And with all the prayers he's getting from around the world, I know God is listening and watching over us both. So thank you. I'm still doing as well as I can and I appreciate all the love and support everyone is offering. God bless you all.

Pam Voltin